Greater Washington Partnership Statement on Revival of Red Line Project in Baltimore

WASHINGTON – Kathy Hollinger, CEO of the Greater Washington Partnership, issued the following statement today on Maryland Governor Wes Moore’s announcement to revive the Red Line project in Baltimore:

“The Greater Washington Partnership applauds Governor Moore’s announcement of a revived process to advance the new Red Line. The Baltimore region has waited long enough for the East-West rapid transit transformation that can better connect the region, generate shared prosperity, and drive regional competitiveness. We look forward to continued collaboration with the Moore-Miller Administration and the region’s public and private leaders to collectively push forward this critical regional transit project that can create jobs, improve mobility, and foster inclusive economic growth. Governor Moore’s revived Red Line process takes us one step closer to the vision outlined in our Blueprint for Regional Mobility and our partnership with the Greater Baltimore Committee to advance Baltimore’s Transit Future.”

In June 2022, the Greater Washington Partnership, in partnership with the Greater Baltimore Committee, launched the Baltimore’s Transit Future campaign to build support among leaders in the Baltimore region to deliver a transformed transit system for Baltimore residents and businesses. Since its launch, more than 70 Greater Baltimore businesses and institutions have come together to advance this effort.
